SECTION -A (READING)

1. Read the passage carefully and answer TEN questions out of TWELVE questions. (1×10=10) As the New Year approached, like many others, I found myself making resolutions in my mind. The usual suspects made their appearance: waking up earlier, eating healthier, spending more time with loved ones, tackling household chores, being kinder to those I don't particularly like, driving cautiously, and taking the dog for a daily walk. But this time, I was determined to make my resolutions unique and achievable, learning from past failures.

I realized that one of the reasons why most of us fail in our efforts to self-improve is because our goals are often too ambitious, and we struggle to find time to follow through with them. So, I decided to keep my resolutions to myself, limiting them to just two modest ambitions: exercising every morning and reading more every evening.

The first resolution was to exercise for just eleven minutes every morning before anyone else in my household was awake. The challenge was real, as dragging myself out of bed eleven minutes earlier than usual required significant self-discipline. But for the first two days, I managed to sneak down to the living room and jump around on the carpet without being caught. However, my cover was blown when my exhausted state after the exercise gave me away at the breakfast table. Soon, my family caught on, and my morning exercise routine became a subject of amusement for them. Despite their teasing, I tried to stick to it, but gradually, my enthusiasm waned, and I found myself back to square one by January 10th, giving up on the morning exercise routine.

Undeterred by my failure in the first resolution, I focused on my second resolution to read more every evening. I resisted the allure of television and spent a few evenings with my eyes glued to a book in my room. However, one cold and lonely night, I succumbed to the temptation of television and pretended to read while dozing off in front of the screen. It became a habit again, and I realized I had fallen back into my old ways.

Despite these setbacks, I refused to give up on my resolution to read more. In fact, I took a bold step and bought a book titled 'How To Read A Thousand Words A Minute'. However, the irony was not lost on me that I hadn't found the time to read it yet, showcasing the challenges I faced in keeping up with my resolutions.

i) What were the usual suspects in the author's list of New Year resolutions?

- a) Waking up earlier, eating healthier, spending more time with loved ones
- b) Tackling household chores, being kinder to those not liked, driving cautiously
- c) Taking the dog for a daily walk
- d) All of the above

ii) Why did the author decide to keep their resolutions to themselves this time?

- a) Because they didn't want to be teased by their family
- b) Because they realized that announcing resolutions to others can lead to feeling foolish if they fail
- c) Because they wanted to surprise their family with their achievements
- d) Because they wanted to keep their resolutions a secret

iii) What was the author's first resolution for the New Year?

- a) Exercising every morning for eleven minutes
- b) Reading more every evening

2. Read the passage carefully and answer TEN questions out of ELEVEN questions.

(1×10=10)

In the bustling buses of Delhi, a unique social dynamic emerges as passengers rely on each other for bodily comfort during the chaotic commutes. Northern Indians, known for their difficulty in keeping steady in moving vehicles, often lean against each other or even put their arms around fellow passengers to maintain balance. It is a common sight to see strangers intertwined, using each other as cushions without any ill-natured objections. The concept of personal space takes a backseat as the need for stability takes precedence in these crowded buses.

However, this physical closeness is not limited to mere support. The buses are also filled with lively conversations, ranging from public topics to embarrassingly private ones. Strangers freely engage in discussions, breaking social barriers, and sharing personal anecdotes. It is not uncommon for jokes to be exchanged, even between acquaintances and total strangers alike. One incident involved a fellow-passenger noticing the weight of the narrator's large topee (hat), remarking that it was heavier than their entire body. When the narrator responded in kind, the stranger playfully hoped that offense was not taken at the joke, highlighting the light-hearted banter that often occurs in these close quarters.

The bus rides also present an opportunity for strangers to inquire about each other's well-being. The narrator recalls a time when they experienced an irritation at the back of their neck, causing them to jerk and perk their head like a bird. A curious fellow-passenger, inquiring in English, asked if it was a habit or a disease. The narrator, initially taken aback by the question, sought clarification, leading to a comical exchange as the stranger mimicked their movements. The conversation ended with the stranger concluding that it must be a habit, as habits tend to become second nature.

Despite the lack of personal space and the intimate interactions with strangers, the unwritten social norms of the Delhi buses are accepted with ease. In a city known for its chaotic traffic and overcrowded public transportation, passengers adapt to the circumstances and make the most of their journeys. The buses become a melting pot of diverse individuals, transcending social, cultural, and economic boundaries. It is a unique experience where the common goal of reaching their respective destinations overrides any notions of personal space or privacy.

Furthermore, these interactions in the buses of Delhi reflect the warmth and camaraderie that is inherent in Indian culture. Indians are known for their friendliness, hospitality, and a sense of community, and these qualities are reflected even in the chaos of daily bus rides. It is a testament to the resilience and adaptability of the people, who find solace and connection in unexpected places, even amidst the chaos of a crowded bus.
